

THE GREAT VS. THE LEADER: WHO WOULD WIN?

By: Nathan Gonzalez

ALEXANDER THE GREAT: THE FEARLESS CONQUEROR

Alexander, son of King Philip II, was a conqueror, a leader, a general, but most importantly, a fearless, Roman conqueror. Expanding the kingdom of Rome, Alexander was not planning to stop until he ruled the known world. He stood against enemies of all strengths. But, in Babylon, he lost his life to the world's strongest enemy: death.

I think Alexander would win because Julius is not as brave as Alexander.

Both Alexander and Caesar: Not So Different

Both Alexander and Julius shared many things in common, like they both were leaders. Without them, the course of history could have been entirely different. Also, both were thirsty for power, and would not stop until they had it all. Finally, both were very brave at what they did. Alexander showed no fear when on the front line of war, and Julius didn't think twice about whether or not to be leader, even if he had many enemies after him.

Julius Caesar: The Power Thirsty Leader

Julius Caesar was born into poverty and in a bad time in the world. He grew up a kind person, despite his poorness. As he grew older, he was elected a leader, and from then on, was on the hunt for more to rule. After a long term of Caesar's ruling, some people did not agree with him. He ended up getting stabbed multiple times to his death, causing his long term of rulership to come to an end.
